ICM Capital Launches Trading in Cryptocurrencies CFDs

Just recently, the company recently launched trading on the bitcoin cfd. That is , a widely traded cyptocurrency CFDs.

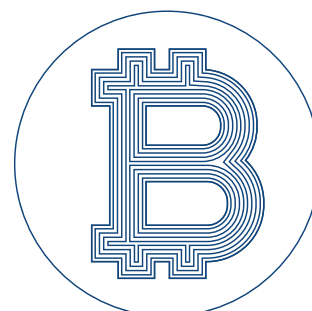

What is a CFD?

CFD is the abbreviation for "Contract for Difference." When you trade CFDs you are simply trading the price of the instrument; you never actually take ownership of the product. The advantage here is that you can trade the product whether the price is falling or rising.

Why trade Cryptocurrency CFDs?

The move would enable traders to take a position on whether the value of the underlying cryptocurrency asset will rise or fall, without having to take the risks associated with buying and storing it, similar to spreads on a range of asset classes from forex to commodities.

The intrinsic volatility of cryptocurrencies makes them appealing to traders with a steady nerve. Back in 2010, bitcoins were worth around 0.003 cents each. As of Februrary 2018, that figure is upwards of $10,000 – though this value has proved volatile, with frequent intraday swings.

Designed around our clients' and industry's evolving needs, cTrader, our latest platform, will offer our stakeholders access to state-of-the-art technologies that will enhance and optimise their trading experience. Today, cTrader is one of the most popular retail trading terminals in the Electronic FX (E-FX) market. We are confident in that it will bring immense value and unprecedented access to our cliental."

From his part, James Glyde, Chief Commercial Officer for Spotware, the developer of the cTrader platform said:

"We are delighted that another industry leading, FCA regulated broker has made the cTrader platform available to their clients. ICM Capital has a clear client-centric approach and I am certain that their business will continue to grow with their core principles and now up-to-date trading environment."
